1. d Home Coming is the story of Phatik Chakravorty. He was the chief of the boys of the village always looking for mischiefs. One day he planned the shifting of a log lying on the mudflat of the rivers waiting to be shaped into a mast for a boat. He along with his companions wanted to shift the log from its place and roll it away. The owners of the log would be angry and they would enjoy the fun.

Makhan, Phatik's younger brother came there and sat on the log presumably for stopping the boys to carry out their plan. But the boys rolled the log with Makhan on it and consequently Makhan fell down on the earth. The boy cried with delight but Phatik was frightened. This shows that he is not thoroughly wicked. Probably he was afraid that Matchan had serious injuries or he feared his mother's rebukes.

Phatik sat down on a boat on the river bank and began to chew a piece of grass. An elderly stranger came and asked him the direction to the Chakrabortis house. Phatik carelessly pointed a direction which could properly understand. On second enquiry, Phatik replied brusquely to the man to go and find out. This is another example of Phatik's mischievous pranks. The stranger enquired about the house of Phatik.

Phatik was wild and wayward. He did not go to school and did not learn his lessons. He He He His ill-treatment of his brothers often prompted his mothers to chide and beat him. ~~Indeed~~ Indeed his mothers's patience was taxed to the extreme because ~~Phatik~~ Phatik could not be controlled. So when Phatik's uncle came to their house and proposed to take him to Calcutta and look after his education, the mother readily agreed. Phatik was also eager to go to Calcutta for he heard about its many attractions.

But in Calcutta, Phatik soon found himself an outsider. His aunt considered him an additional burden on the family. In school he was regularly caned by the teachers for failing to answer the questions. He lost his book, the aunt rebuked him rudely. He was a child of Nature in the city its cramped atmosphere with big house and walls which shut out the open sky, and the neglect in the aunt's house and oppression in the school his spirit was smothered. Gradually he developed headache and fever. He feared that he would be worse nuisance to his aunt and so he fled. When the police brought him he was delirious to his aunt and so he fled. When the police brought him he was delirious and gradually he was on the brink of death. He craved for going to his country home and now he went to his true home, i.e. heaven. His death is redolent of pathetic Charam.

Phatik was a sensitive boy - sensitive to Nature's bounty. The broad fields and rivers have natural attraction for the boy. He was lazy and wild in the worldly sense, but he was really in tune with the spirit of Nature. In the city he was out of peace. The oppressive atmosphere everywhere stifled his spirit. He was born and brought up in Nature, his mind yearned to go back there. Nature was his true home in the city he found himself shut out from Nature, his home. In death, he got back to his house. His holiday from the city was granted.

3-a. Sita is a beautiful elegiac poem which shows Toru Dutt's interest in the legends and puranas of India. The poem has an autobiographical element. The poetess used to hear stories of the puranas from her mother with her sisters Anu and brothers Abju. Toru Dutt recalls her childhood her gaiety and sympathy when they heard the stories of Indian mythology. She remembers those happy days with warm affection. They used to get emotionally involved in the sad fate of Sita who was exiled who was kept in captivity by Ravana and who brought up her children in the forest of Valmiki. Again, she had to face the trial of proving her faithfulness. Sita broke and wept. Children were also moved to tears.

Valmiki's hermitage stands before our eyes, but even more vivid and haunting is Sita in her sorrows, and the three children weeping because Sita is weeping. The last two lines are a poignant elegy on the early death of Abju and Aru. The poetess had written the poem ~~feelings~~ feelingly and evoked a scene and emotion which leave an indelible imprint on the mind. Interrogative ~~sentences~~ sentences interposed enhance the suspense and interest of story - telling words are meticulously chosen. Expression like wide-open eyes, darkened room, poet anchorite, young eyes, young heads evoked sad Sita melts the picture of the thickness of the Forest Darkened room creates the atmosphere of gloominess which is a fitting background of the sad story of Sita. Young eyes, young heads suggest the impressionable minds of young man and young woman.

The last two lines are poignantly elegiac because the brothers and sisters of the poetess met early death.

The poem of 22 lines is neatly structured. The first part of eleven lines depicts the natural scenery of the forest of the poet anchorite. The suspense is created by the question But who is the fair lady? Here whole tale of suffering and misfortunes is suggested in the line
